The MDHSS should not have authority to add or change vaccine policy. Their job is to 'promote vaccines in a positive light'. This violates informed consent principles and also presents conflicts of interest. You cannot promote vaccines, not recognize the risks, then also be in charge of mandating them on the public.

I went to my first waiver session in 2015. I was delaying vaccines for my fourth child because I was always concerned about vaccine risks. I thought I would actually learn more about the diseases and which vaccines might be more important. Well, I learned nothing but the same propaganda that is spouted by the CDC, Dr's, and media. "Vaccines are safe, effective and vaccines save lives. And if you don't vaccinate you are putting your child and others at risk." I learned nothing from the session and since then have done over a thousand hours of research.

I now know that 90% of morbidity and mortality from diseases was reduced prior to mass vaccination due to modern plumbing, clean water and better nutrition. I know that you can't sue the vaccine manufacturers since the passage of the 1986 national childhood injury act and since then, the CDC schedule has more than tripled, and over 3 billion has been paid out from vaccine court. I now know all of the extremely toxic additives in vaccines and that live virus vaccines are grown on aborted fetal tissue. I also know that vaccine induced herd immunity is a myth. Vaccine efficacy lasts for 2-10 years and most adults and older teens are not getting regular boosters, so more than half the population is unvaccinated and there are no epidemics.

I am a mother of 4. If all my kids were little, I would be going to the HD for a biased "education " session from 6-7 times per child or 24-28 times in total for a useless propoganda session. I guarantee I have done way more research than 99% of the staff at the HD that would "educate" me.

If they want a session, let's do one time per family and give true informed consent.

Parents can alway go back if they need more assistance, but let the parents have the choice in how they raise their kids, especially when they are the only ones who are responsible for the risks of vaccination.

Why should the HD, that's job is to promote vaccines and give only the benefits of vaccines and not the risks , be able to make regulations on their products. All vaccine legislation needs to go through the legislators and have input from their constituents.
